A pilot project initiated by Conversations for a One Planet Region and the Participatory Learning Study Group

Re-imagining Life In A One Planet Region

Six Monday Evening Meetings

March 22, 29 and April 12, 19, 26 and May 3

7-9pm

Explore new ways of living more equitably to sustain life on our planet for us and future generations.

We act as if we have several planets to sustain us when in reality we only have one.

Join a small group of local citizens in a six week pilot participatory learning program, to explore how we might live within the limits of the one small planet that is our only home, in a way that is socially, culturally and ecologically just.

Meetings will include:

- Some background material presented during the meeting to introduce the themes for discussion
- Small breakout groups, designed to enable a deeper level of sharing and discussion
- Some supplementary reading material and videos sent out prior to meetings
- Though in person meetings are optimal, using Zoom to gather during this pandemic, still offers a rich opportunity to explore our relationship with the earth and each other.

Space is limited to 12 participants. To apply click here

What participants can expect to get out of this experience?

- Connect to other community members wanting to create more just and sustainable ways of living.
- Become more effective in communicating and contributing to the work needed to build a connected, thriving region.
- Experience passion, and find purpose in working with others towards a One Planet region.

Cost

There are no financial barriers to participating in this program, but if you can afford it, we welcome a contribution – for details see Program Details

The study group will be led by Gary MacDougall & Clare Attwell (link to bios)
